The USIBD was founded to promote and facilitate:

- Building Documentation as a distinct industry;
- Establishing standards, guidelines and best practices to foster excellence in the productivity, quality and safety of the documentation process;
- The codification of ethical practices to support and further the growing network of professionals dedicated to Building Documentation;
- Cooperation and the exchange of information among documentation professionals who are responding to growing interest in Building Documentation by owners/operators, service providers, government agencies, and the public;
- The establishment and promotion of “Certified Building Documentation Professional” certification (CBDP);
- The institution of a core educational resource dedicated to the pioneering technology of the Building Documentation industry;
- Recognition of individuals for outstanding dedication and service to the Building Documentation profession.

As an architect with over thirty years of experience in building survey and documentation, I have come to realize that the profession of building documentation in the United States is lacking a national organization to help promote, guide and support this industry.
